In Kenya, citizens face significant barriers to participating in the democratic process and holding their leaders accountable.

- 1. Limited access to information - a feature not a bug
  - Citizens often lack access to accurate and timely information about government policies, projects, and decisions that affect their lives

- 2. Inadequate channels for feedback: Existing mechanisms for citizen engagement, such as town hall meetings and public consultations, are often ineffective, exclusive, or dominated by special interest groups.

- 3. Low civic awareness: Many Kenyans lack a clear understanding of their rights, responsibilities, and the role they can play in shaping their country's future.

- 4. Disenfranchisement and disillusionment: The lack of meaningful participation and representation has led to widespread disillusionment with the political process, resulting in low voter turnout and decreased civic engagement.

How we're solving it: skika.netlify.app

- 1. Access information: Our platform aggregates and simplifies information on government policies, projects, and decisions, making it easier for citizens to stay informed.

- 2. Provide feedback: Citizens can engage with their leaders and policymakers through surveys, polls, and discussion forums, ensuring their voices are heard and valued.

- 3. Develop civic awareness: Our platform offers educational resources, workshops, and training programs to enhance citizens' understanding of their rights, responsibilities, and the democratic process.

- 4. Participate in decision-making: citizen participation in policy-making and budgeting processes, enabling citizens to contribute to decisions that affect their communities.
